REPORT
OF THE EXAMINERS
ON THE WORKS SENT FROM THE SCHOOLS OF ART IN COMPETITION FOR NATIONAL MEDALLIONS.

May 1863.

THE works locally rewarded with medals and sent up for National Competition this year again show an increase on those of last year, which, as the number of schools remain the same as on the former occasion, indicates the advanced instruction afforded to the pupils. Last year 579 works were allowed by the Inspectors to be forwarded to London; on this occasion the number has increased to 651 works from 82 schools of art.

The examiners notice with satisfaction that the execution of the works in competition is freer from manner than heretofore; that in the treatment of light and shadow, more attention is given to breadth and relief combined with truth of detail, and less to the mere executive mode in which those qualities are rendered and expressed.

In making the awards they are aware that, while two works from the same school may in any given stage of instruction be permitted to compete for National Medallions, it has not been usual for the department to permit both works to receive rewards.

In cases where there are schools for male and female students, conducted separately from each other, the objection to double awards in the same stage does not hold good; but even in other instances, such has been the marked excellence of the works from some schools that the examiners could not withhold double awards; and they hope that, without establishing any rule or precedent for the practice, the awards will be confirmed.

They have much pleasure in noticing a great advance in one or two schools, in the works in stage 8, "drawing the figure from the round."

Those from Edinburgh afford an example of the double awards already adverted to, and such is the excellence of the drawings, as well indeed as of the works from this school generally, that the examiners would recommend some gratuity from the Board to the Master to mark its sense of the success of his teaching.

They have to regret that so few studies from the living model, either nude or draped, have been submitted to them.

In stage 22*a*, the object of which is to analyze flowers and foliage for the ornamental forms to be derived from them, they would remark that representations, however accurate, of flowers in plan, elevation, and sections, do not include all the suggestions for ornament which such objects contain; others might be sought in flattened views of the flower as seen foreshortened, or as compressed with varied turns of the sepals, petals, &c., of which many examples may be found in decorative works of the Renaissance.

Again, in using such forms, whether of flowers or foliage, as diapers, it is not always necessary that the display of the unit should be entirely symmetrical; in such cases symmetry will necessarily arise from the geometrical combinations of the powdering or diaper. Also, it is to be noted that elegant natural growths of plants or flowers may be flatly treated for this purpose, and so used, may, in their combined arrangement, produce more agreeable complication and intricacy (valuable qualities in some species of decoration), than the more symmetrical display of the unit of form.

In stage 22*d*, studies of historic styles, they would remark that it is objectionable to contrast indifferently the relief ornament of one style with the flat ornament of another; such as Roman capitals on friezes with Greek ornaments painted on the surface of vases, or the carved work of the Renaissance with forms from the textile fabrics of the East. They rather recommend that relief ornament should be contrasted with relief ornament, and surface decoration with surface decoration. They have also to note that a valuable regulation as to this stage is but seldom complied with, since they find only a few instances in which the student has accompanied his contrasts of styles with references to the original sources from which the ornament has been derived. As the chief use of this section of study consists in the information the student thus gathers, the practice should be more stringently enforced in future.

A list of the awards of the examiners has been appended, and in concluding their labour on this occasion, they are happy to report that the instruction throughout the schools as evinced by the works submitted, appears to be sound and satisfactory.
